English and Comprehension Test

Read the story and answer the questions. 30 minutes

George had just started school. At the beginning of the week he was in the reception class, by the end he was in Year 6. George was a very talented child, in fact he was top of the top class. At the end of his first week at school he went to bed saying he felt tired ... suddenly there was an awful wailing coming from his bedroom.

"I'm coming, my baby!" called George's mother. "Mummy's coming!" and she rushed upstairs to find George sitting up in bed, sobbing his heart out. This was not the confident self-assured know-it-all cleverest child in the school. This was just a frightened baby, and she cuddled him as fiercely as she had when he was only tiny and had never spoken a word. "What is it, George darling?" she said as she mopped away his tears. "Did you have a bad dream?"

"I did, I did Mummy!" sobbed George.

"What was it? Tell Mummy."

Gradually George's sobs turned to sniffles, and then he blew his nose and said, "I dreamt we were doing a science test at school."

"A science test?"

"Yes, we do science in the new curriculum, you know. And there was a simple question in it that I couldn't answer, and I cried like a baby. I cried in the dream, and I was crying when I woke up. I really must apologise for behaving so childishly."

"Poor lamb!" said his mother. "What was the question?"

"It was the order of events in the cycle of the internal combustion engine," said George.

"Forget about it, George," said his mother sadly. "I expect that there'll be lots of questions you won't know the answers to."

"Not if I can help it," said George.

"Anyway, don't worry. Just go back to sleep. Mummy's here."

"Oh, I shan't worry any more, Mother," said George in his usual confident tones. "I've remembered it now. It's Induction - Compression - Ignition - Exhaust," and exhausted, he lay back and went happily to sleep.

Underline the right answers.
