

Suggested Reading Books for Children

Preparing for the 11+ exams

Reading on a regular basis is an excellent way to help your child develop their English skills and vocabulary in preparation for entrance exams/11+ exams. It will certainly help them in English and verbal reasoning tests.

Reading helps children to identify and understand the use of similes, metaphors, adjectives, adverbs etc. within sentences; it also helps them to see how sentences can be constructed in different ways and apply the rules of English grammar and spellings.

It is important to try and expose your child to the many different types of literature, such as poems, short stories, letters, non-fiction, magazines and newspaper articles.

Reading should be fun, so try not to make it yet another piece of homework that your child has to do. Help them to choose books to read from a local library or perhaps on a Kindle/e-Reader and perhaps consider rewarding them for after they have read a few books to encourage them to read more. Try and make reading part of normal life by including it in your child's daily routine e.g. reading before going to bed. Listening to your child read and discussing the content with them will also encourage them to read more as you are showing that you consider reading an important skill.

The following suggestions are a mix of classics and more contemporary books and are in no particular order. I have noted against a few books where I think they may be considered more appropriate for boys or girls.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle - The Lost World, Sherlock Holmes, The Hound of the Baskervilles
